Ambulatory surgery: The Indian perspective.

Continued.....

In India, we are faced with the unique problem of overburdened Public hospitals, as well as, increasing cost of surgeries in the Private hospitals. Also, there is a fast emerging group of jet-setting executives and business men, who do not have the time to 'waste' in hospitals, and are looking for fast recovery, enabling them to get back to work as early as possible. The answer lies in the proper and complete utilization of Day Care surgery.

According to the latest government estimates, the doctor-patient ratio is 1:1800 and the hospital bed-patient ratio of 1:1259. There is an estimated shortage of 42,000 beds in just the government hospitals which cater to 60% of the population. (16)

As far as National programme and policy making is concerned, the government agencies have been over-burdened by the epidemics and pandemics of AIDS, Malaria, Kala Azar, Polio and malnutrition. Consequently, the surgical speciality, especially, Day surgery, is not on their priority programme.

Medical insurance covers a small fraction of population but most of these insurance companies still insist on a 24 hrs. admission. Hopefully, these policies will soon change, and would make it easy for all to get benefit from day surgery.

The problems we face are: lack of awareness in the patient population and poor facilities for training doctors in this speciality. The Medical education system has not incorporated day surgical training into their curriculum. These have to be acquired as part of your practical experience once you have completed your specialisation. Ambulatory surgery or Day surgery will have to be a super speciality, creating its own identity.

The Indian Association of Day Surgery was conceptualised in 2003 by a few like minded surgeons, who were interested in day surgery.
